CAN STATES COIN SILVER MONEY?

Since the final danger to silver appeared the Denver News has received very many communications urging that the Colorado legislature should authorize the coinage of silver into money and declare it a legal tender. The Dallas (Texas) Times-Herald, a sterling free coinage, in its issue of the 4th instant, strongly recommends that a league between Texas and other silver States shall be formed—for each to coin silver money, making it legal tender, and through the comity of States recognize the coinage of each as legal tender in the others. "The timid trader may say," it continues, "this will cut off commercial intercourse—we cannot buy in the markets of the world. Then quit buying and start buying factories at home. A thousand factories will work no harm to Texas."

The News comments on this as follows:

"The reasoning of the Times-Herald is as follows: The congress of the United States must seek a warrant and authority for its every act within the lines laid down by the federal constitution. With a State legislature the rule is the reverse. Unless inhibited by the State federal constitutions or restrained by solemn treaties, there is practically no limit to the power of a State legislature. It is as omnipotent as the parliament of Great Britain. It then says the federal constitution does not inhibit a State legislature from authorizing the State to coin silver into money and declaring it a legal tender, and quotes the provision of the federal constitution that 'no State shall make anything but gold and silver coin a tender or payment of debts,' urging that this negative is the equivalent of authority to States to make silver coin of their own creation legal tender money."

"If the News could discover any authority in the federal constitution for what has been so frequently suggested it would without hesitation urge that the State adopt it. It would enable Colorado and the West, in spite of Congress and an adverse President, to keep our mines open and supply them with an abundance of the best money in the world. But, alas, the re is no such authority, as a little investigation will convince the most ardent supporter of the plan."

"The federal constitution provides that the congress shall have power to coin money and regulate the value thereof. This means that congress and congress only possesses that power, and State legislatures can exercise no such power. Indeed the constitution further expressly provides that 'no State shall * * * coin money; emit bills of credit or make anything but gold and silver coin a tender in payment of debts.'"

"The States are prohibited from making anything but gold and silver coin a legal tender. This does not mean that they make gold or silver a legal tender, but gold or silver coin. Since congress only may coin money and the States are prohibited from doing so, it follows the coin a State may make legal tender is the coin authorized by congress. The gold and silver coin of the United States are already legal tender under the acts authorizing their coinage. Therefore an act of the State legislature to the same effect would be superfluous."

"There is but one way in which the State legislature can utilize uncoined silver as money. If congress shall repeal the ten per cent tax on the circulation of private banks the legislature might authorize silver bullion under proper regulations to be held as bank reserves to secure their circulation."

"If Congress should destroy the legal tender quality of the standard dollar it would become a grave question whether State Legislatures might not, in spite of Congress, make them legal tender for every purpose within the several States. Although Congress might demonetize them, yet would they not remain silver coin within the meaning of the Constitution, and are not States permitted by necessary implication under the Constitution to make silver coin—coined by authority of Congress—legal tender, although Congress should repeal the act by which they became such?"
